Quarterly investment update, July to end September 2019

Hot topics – ‘Top-down’ (market and macroeconomic)

Down the rabbit hole. For the first time in her race for the Democratic presidential nomination, Elizabeth Warren is now the challenger of frontrunner Joe Biden. She has steadily gained in popularity and by early October Mr Biden's ratings had fallen under the cloud of his son's past directorship of a Ukrainian gas company, putting her in touching distance. Fellow radical Bernie Sanders has stalled lately, leaving him firmly in third place. Senator Warren's supporters have a catch phrase: "Warren has a plan for that". And the market is getting nervous of a couple of them in particular: finance and healthcare. She's still a long way from gaining her party's nomination – let alone taking the White House – but you could see those sectors stir in response to her boost in the polls. Our exposure to healthcare is limited, but we do own a couple of specialist US banks and credit card companies. More generally, the policy swing from a Trump White House to a Warren one would be whiplash-inducing. If Mrs Warren appears likely to win in 2020, we would have to carefully review our American holdings.

Same same, but different. Boris Johnson used the Conservative Party Conference in early October to deliver his compromise deal for the European Union (EU). To longsighted folk like me (David), it looked virtually identical to Theresa May's. But Will has sharper eyes than me. Mr Johnson has come up with a slightly different arrangement to the Irish backstop which combines some of the untested technological solutions that the EU has refused in the past with a division of law at the Irish Sea that the UK had previously called a red line. Whether the EU will agree to it – or British MPs for that matter – was yet to be seen when we wrote this. The plan's struggle for success in the tough world of ideas won't affect our positioning any. We've been set for the Brexit end game (or lack of it) for some time. We have kept our UK exposure low and we are waiting for certainty before leaping back in. This could mean we miss out on some relief rally or resurgence in British stocks, but we'd prefer that to investing in a quagmire.

Perception ≠ Reality. All the talk of the death of oil and the growing importance of renewable energy sources makes it easy to forget a universal truth: virtually everything synthetic you touch has the taint of crude oil. It's plastic or wrapped in it. Petroleum has been spun into fibres for your clothes or used to send them round the world by jet or ship. Even your organic food has been delivered to your local market by truck or van. This is a problem! And not just for the environment. The whole global economy is greased by the black stuff – a commodity that is overwhelmingly exposed to some of the world's most precarious regions. A peaceful Middle East is an oxymoron, yet things have been getting even worse there recently. We felt the chance of a disruption to the Middle Eastern oil industry – a major artery for global commerce – was rising and the risk underappreciated by global investors. Then Iranian/Yemeni missiles and drones took down half of Saudi Arabia's productive capacity, sending the oil price spiking toward $70. The Saudis managed to patch up their damaged refineries and get back to touching distance of full production nationwide in under three weeks. Maybe we should get the Saudis to tender for the M4 project – it would be done in four weeks, not four years...

Portfolio activity

Portfolio activity

Key purchases/additions	Key sales/trims
Linde (new purchase)	UK Treasury 1.625% 2028 (sale)
BP (new purchase)	Vodafone 0.5% 2031 (sale)
Singapore Government 2.25% 2021 (new purchase)	Credit Suisse 1% 2023 (sale)
Ecolab (addition)	Coupland Cardiff Japan Alpha Unhedged Fund (trim)

We bought industrial gases company Linde for the first time. This company was formed by the merger of industry giants Praxair (American) and Linde (German) earlier this year. The combined operation is now the largest in its industry. This is the sort of business we love: supplying a crucial product (gas) to businesses in an industry that is hard for new competitors to enter. This has the sweetener of synergies from the merger that should help improve profitability further.

We sold our UK Treasury 1.625% 2028 bonds in late July because yields on longer-dated debt had fallen to exceptional lows. We swapped them for the shorter-dated UK Treasury 1.5% 2021 and UK Treasury 0.5% 2022. As it turned out, yields had even further to fall. We are happy to continue buying US and UK sovereign debt when yields rise and selling when they fall. During the yield slump we also sold our highly rated Swiss-denominated credit, including Vodafone 0.5% 2031 and the negative-yielding Credit Suisse Funding 1% 2023.

We used some of that cash to buy government debt in the East: the Singapore Government 2.25% 2021 is the highest yielding two-year AAA sovereign. Another bit of protection was buying more put contracts on the S&P 500 Index, which give us the option to sell our index exposure at a certain level. This mitigates losses we would suffer if the stock market slumps.

We also reduced our positions in the Coupland Cardiff Japan Alpha Unhedged Fund and the JP Morgan Japan Equity Fund.

Spotlight

In this quarter, the spotlight is on our Gaming Basket and Accenture.

Gaming Basket

- The gaming market is large and is growing quickly – it is estimated there are already around 2 billion gamers across the globe and the revenues are already greater than that of the movie industry
- Move to downloading and streaming games has meant the market can be larger and more profitable as the need for physical discs and places to sell them reduces – 5G could also increase the addressable market with better game streaming on the move
- The average age of a gamer in the US is 35 years old – these are people with jobs and money to spend rather than the stereotypes
- 'The International' is an annual e-sports event where teams play the game Dota 2 in an arena watched by thousands in person, and many more online. The prize pool this year was $34 million with the winning team taking home $15 million – there is real money in gaming and we expect it to continue to grow rapidly
- We own four gaming stocks to provide adequate diversification and to address the higher volatility you can see in these names – they tend to fluctuate a great deal around their latest game release
- In our gaming basket we own, Electronic Arts (FIFA football game franchise), Ubisoft (Assassin's Creed games), Activision Blizzard (Call of Duty games), and Take-Two Interactive (Grand Theft Auto games)

Accenture

- A global professional services firm specialising in consulting and outsourcing – across 40 industries and 120 countries
- The world is changing quickly and large organisations are under threat in the new world – they have the ability to support these organisations in adapting to this new world, not only with ideas, but with end-to-end delivery
- Many businesses are still early in their digital transformation and Accenture has significant expertise in supporting their clients through this process – this need for digital transformation plays to their strengths
- The focus on areas such as cloud, big data, artificial intelligence, and cyber security mean they are at the forefront of how businesses need to evolve to deal with these new threats and opportunities
- The strong relationships they have built over a number of years with many large global firms, such as Microsoft, provide excellent insight to where the world is moving, but also a very loyal client base

Fund performance

Performance (based on 'LO-Class' shares; 1.50% annual management charge). Net of expenses and tax. Net income reinvested.

Data source: Financial Express

Our benchmarks are calculated on the rate of change of the CPI index, over different time periods (e.g. if we were calculating year to date figures in January 2019, we would look at the percentage change from December 2018 to the end of January 2019). So we take CPI to the current value, and add on the 3% to 5% respectively, prorated over a year (roughly 0.25% and 0.42% per month). If the CPI Index benchmark were to fall, more than the amount pro-rata, the benchmark year-to-date will be negative, even though inflation as reported by the media (calculated specifically as a 12M rate of change), remains positive.

Past performance should not be seen as an indication of future performance. The value of investments and the income from them may go down as well as up and you may not get back your original investment.

The investment objective of the sub-fund changed on 25 March 2019 due to the sub-fund ceasing to be part of a master feeder arrangement. Therefore, performance in the chart shown prior to this date was achieved under differing circumstances.

Our exposure to London Stock Exchange provided a materially positive contribution over the period. A strong quarter was bolstered in July by the announcement of the planned acquisition of Refinitiv. This was then followed up by the potential approach of Hong Kong Exchange (HKEX) to acquire LSE on the basis that they drop the Refinitiv deal. The HKEX approach appeared to quickly be rebuffed by LSE management in favour of continuing to pursue the Refinitiv deal.

Our iShares Physical Gold ETF in the portfolios followed up a strong second quarter with a good third quarter. As we have mentioned before, gold is an important part of the portfolio as we believe it serves to protect when geopolitical tensions rise. But importantly, gold should be a key beneficiary from a negative rate environment given that, whilst gold does not produce a yield, this is superior to negative yields on offer across a number of bond markets.

Government bond yields fell (prices rose) sharply during the quarter, which was supportive for our government bond exposure in the portfolio, although given we had not wanted to buy longer dated debt due to the price, we did not participate as much in the rally, but it was a helpful contributor.

Ulta Beauty was one of the biggest detractors over the quarter as they missed estimates for their second quarter earnings and also guided down for the year based on weaker trends in the cosmetics market. We are still positive about the longer-term prospects for the business despite the tougher conditions for the cosmetics market and added slightly to our position on the weakness. Interestingly, one of the directors bought around $59 million of shares as October began. So one could perhaps take this as somewhat of a vote of confidence on his part – that's certainly a meaningful amount of skin in the game!

Asset allocation change and strategy

There were no significant asset allocation changes during the quarter.

Investment outlook

The long-vaunted 'great rotation' of 'growth' stocks toward 'value' ones showed signs of stirring into life this quarter.

Value companies – those that are closely linked to the ebb and flow of economic growth – have performed so poorly for so long that many people believe they have to come good at some point. The idea is that there will be a large and sustained move away from the growth companies that are more highly valued and less affected by economic downturns. This 'great rotation' story gets a lot of play at value investor campfires and about once a year the yarn goes mainstream. And yet the rotation hasn't actually come to pass. We don't believe it will, either. Sure, there will be weeks, months and sometimes even quarters when value will outdo growth. But in a low-growth world, we think investors will inevitably be dragged back to those companies that can reliably boost their earnings regardless of the wider economy.

October is shaping as a pretty pivotal month. It tends to be a particularly spicy one for stock markets, but it could be a real 'vindaloo' this year, given recent concerns about GDP growth and the effect of the US-China trade war on businesses all round the world. Many investors will no doubt see the October earnings season as a referendum on commerce in 2020. It will almost certainly have a bearing on the US Federal Reserve's monetary policy and that is the variable for most investors these days.
